From the Desk of Director General of Archives

Dear User of Archives,

It is a matter of great pleasure that the Catalogue of Publications of the National Archives of India is in your hands. The National Archives of India, which was established at Kolkata in 1891 as Imperial Record Department, came to New Delhi in 1911 to its present location as a result of transfer of Capital from Calcutta to Delhi. The department is functioning as 'Delhi's most intellectual destination' since 1937 in the present building at the crossing of Janpath and Rajpath.

The present publication is not merely a catalogue or list of publications brought out over the last seventy years in pursuance of the approved publication scheme in 1942; rather it unfolds the history of the publication policy of this Department since its origin. The booklet compasses the genesis and growth of publication, provides brief details about each publication, their cost, code as well as status of availability, etc. I would like to add that during last seventy years, after the approved publication policy, approximately 101 titles have been brought out with many of the titles having several volumes. Out these 101 titles, 40 are priced publications, 49 are non-priced, 8 are reprints and 4 are facsimile copies of the manuscripts preserved in the National Archives of India. The earliest official publication is A Hand book to the Records of the Government of India in the Imperial Record Department, which was brought under the able guidance of Shri A. F. M. Abdul Ali, Keeper of Records, Imperial Record Department, in 1925.

As we all head towards digital era, it has been decided to digitize all publications brought out so far and make them available on our website (www.nationalarchives.nic.in) for an easy access to the information therein. The work is huge and obviously time consuming; therefore, it has been planned to execute the digitalization project in three phases. In the first phase, only those non priced publications have been digitized which are in the form of small leaflets, brochures, pamphlets, booklet, etc. and digitization work of the non-priced publications in the volumes will be taken up in the second phase. In the last phase, the digital version of the priced publications would be made available on our website once the facilities for the online payment is incorporated in the website of this Department. However, the information booklet in your hand is also being uploaded on the website for global circulation.

On my request, Shri Rajmani, Assistant Director of Archives, has visualized, edited and finally presented this publication on Publications of the National Archives of India. He deserves special appreciation for this task. Dr. K.C. Jena, Archivist, has coordinated the work of compilation and publication of this publication with the assistance of Sh. Thingnam Sanjeev, Assistant Archivist. S/Shri Deepak Kumar Ahlawat, L.D.C. and Shri Asgar Raja, an Intern, typed the draft of this publication. I also thank S/Shri N. S. Mani, Jagmohan Singh, J. K. Luthra, Microphotographer(s) and Shri Ajay Srivastava for preparation of digital copies of the non-priced publications in the first phase on the website of the Department.

I hope the scholars, historians, academicians and all other users of Archives will welcome this informative and useful publication.

Publications of the National Archives of India. The Publication programme of National Archives of India was started in 1942 on the recommendation of the Research and Publication Committee of the Indian Historical Records Commission. It was taken up under the guidance of Shri S.N. Sen., Director of Archives and as per recommendation of the Committee; the publication scheme was launched in two categories: (a) in-extenso publication of the records and (b) selections from English and Oriental records. Since then, the department is regularly bringing out varied types of publications on the principles suggested in the publication scheme. However, few publications were also brought out by the department prior to the regular publication programme. Besides the aforementioned, the department collaborated with Universities and learned societies and sponsored the publication of selections from Orme Manuscripts (Annamalai University), Punjab Akhbars, 1839-40 (Sikh History Society), Elphinstone's Correspondence 1804-1808 (Nagpur University), Ochterlony Paper 1818-25 (Calcutta University) and the Foreign Department Newsletters, entitled North-Western Frontier and British India 1839-42, 2 Volumes, (Punjab University). Similarly under this programme, a volume each of Bengali, Hindi, Persian, Sanskrit and Telugu documents in the custody of this department have also been sponsored and published. In 1960, the Committee on Archival Legislation under Dr. Tara Chand recommended that the practice of publishing the full text or abridged summary of record series in its entirety or selection from them should cease as soon as the programmes in hands have been completed and the privilege of full publication should be extended to only such special collection as may relate to a phase of history of which there is little or no knowledge. As far the Publication of Education Records, the Committee recommended that the entire task of their editing and publication should be taken out from the National Archives of India and should either be given to an appropriate branch of the Ministry of Education or entrusted to any suitable institution. Later on, the work of publication of the selection of Education Record Series was transferred to the Zakir Hussain Centre for Educational Studies, Jawaharlal Nehru University, New Delhi. A major change in the publication policy occurred in 2010 when Prof. Mushirul Hasan, Director General of Archives, decided to reprint rare books under the 'Archives in India: Historical Reprints Series' in the Public Private Partnership Programme (PPP). In addition to this, the Publication Committee suggested that the Public Records, Private Papers of eminent personalities and collection from Oriental Records available in this department, should be edited and published with the help of eminent academicians for the use of scholars and interested users. The department has so far brought out priced and non-priced publications. The brief details of the publications brought during the last seventy years have been incorporated in this catalogue.

The following publications have been brought out under the project 'Archives in India Historical Reprints' with a Public-Private Partnership initiative.

1. Indian Travels of Jean De Thevenot & Gemelli Careri

The seventeenth century found many European travellers in India. They came from diverse countries by diverse routes on diverse missions; some in quest of trade, others in search of a career, and yet others, a small minority, to seek diversion in new countries among new peoples with strange manners and novel customs. To this rare company belonged Jean de Thevenot and Giovanni Francesco Gemelli Careri. Neither greed nor cupidity not even their country's interest but natural curiosity brought them to the east and with uncommon fidelity they recorded what they saw and heard.

The most valuable part of Thevenot and Careri's travels, as indeed of all other travelers, is where they record their personal experiences and write of the roads they traversed, the town they visited, the men they met, the things they saw, the amenities they enjoyed, the discomforts they suffered and the difficulties they encountered. However, in assessing the historical merit of Thevenot and Careri's travels we should always bear in mind the principle that no authority can be more reliable than the sources referred and consulted. As a contemporary source of Indian history both the travelers will always remain indispensable.

2. Narrative of A Journey Overland from England to India

This Travelogue is a narrative of a journey overland from England by the continent of Europe, Egypt, and the Red Sea to India including a residency there, and voyage home in the years 1825-1828 in the form of letters written by Mrs. Colonel Elwood to her sister Mrs. Elphinstone. In submitting the following letters to the public, the writer is acting upon the suggestions of those on whose judgment she has a firmer reliance than on her own, and who are of opinion, that they may possibly be deemed not wholly uninteresting at this peculiar time, when India, and the over-land communication with that country, are topics of such general conversation. The author has given a true and faithful description of what she saw and felt, in the very peculiar circumstances in which she occasionally found herself; and this account of adventures of the first and only female who has hitherto ventured over-land from England to India, may at least prove not wholly unacceptable to the fair part of the reading community.

3. A Narrative of a Journey Overland from Caunpoor to the Boorendo Pass in the Himalaya Mountain.

The narrative of Journey is divided in to two volumes, one by Major Sir William Lloyd and the second one is by Captain Alexander Gerard. Volume-I of the travelogue is a narrative of journey from Caunpoor to Koteghur by Naan and Jeytuk to the Palains, Volume-II narrates the journey from the Snowy Passes of Himalayas to Shatool, Nawur, Sooran, Rampoor, Kooloo, Nirtnugur, Kotgurh where the Himalayan tour ends. An annexure to the present travelogue is the letter from the late J. G. Gerard, detailing a visit to the Shatool and Boorendo Passes, for the purpose of determining the line of perpetual snow on the southern face of the Himalaya was written upon the spot, and contains facts and results of much importance upon the Isothermal lines of the Himalaya mountains. The present narrative combines instruction with amusement.

4. Imperial India: An Artist Journal 1876-1877

The author Val C. Princep, an exceptional artist had received, somewhat unexpectedly, a commission in the month of October, 1876 to paint a picture for the Indian Government, as a present to Her Majesty the Queen on the occasion of the assumption of the title of Empress of India. He began his journey from England to India early in November 1876 to explore a country artistically unknown to him. He had the advantage of belonging to what is called an Indian family, since he was born in Calcutta, although he left the place at an early age. After his arrival in India, the author had travelled from Calcutta to Delhi and determined to keep a journal and submitted same to the readers.

The reader will find many sketches mentioned in the journals which have been found impossible to reproduce among the illustrations. The exigencies of the publishers had necessitated the author to make a selection from the original journal for reproduction in the present form. In this publication, the author has brought thirty-four sketches of natives - mostly rajahs - and nearly fifty landscape studies and twenty four woodcuts. The author had made a selection of those which he found most interesting to the general public.

5. The Military operations at Cabul

In the 1880s, Afghanistan's state-building problems were dramatically aggravated by the intervention of two new imperialist powers, the British Empire and Czarist Russia. The British saw the Hindu Kush Mountains of Afghanistan as a natural barrier, one that would protect the lucrative Indian subcontinent from invasion. The Military Operations at Cabul provides a first-hand account of British Army operations in Cabul duThis publication provides a first-hand account of British Army operation in Cabul during 1842, when Afghanistan rose up on revolt against its ruler and the British forces in the city. The book provides an insightful account of what happened in the city during this period, followed by a brief relation of the retreat, when Afghan tribal forces decimated the British Army and their followers.

The author also provides an interesting narrative of his time as a prisoner, when he and his family was captured by Akbar Khan, an Afghan Prince and Emir. During nearly nine months in captivity, Eyre kept a diary describing his experiences, illustrated by the sketches of other officers and ladies. The manuscript was smuggled out to a friend in British India and was then published in England as The Military Operations at Cabul in 1843.

6. To Balk, Bokhara and Herat

Fascinatingly, the image of bleak country, tribal warlords, harsh justice, and an ungovernable people that emerges from Mohan Lal's account of the region has continuity in present times. Whether this continuity is because of Orientalist discourse, the games that western and expansionist powers have been playing in the region since the beginning of the nineteenth century, the fierce independence of the warlords who have never submitted to any overarching authority, or a combination of the latter two factors continues to intrigue observers.

Munshi Mohan Lal is an early product of the 'civilizing mission of the British in India. Employed as Persian Secretary by Lieutenant Alexander Burnes, British envoy, during his travels through Afghanistan and Central Asia, Mohan Lal carried a personal diary of his travels as he had been encouraged to do by his British teacher. However, his diary records not merely strategic transactions but also ethnographic and geographical details of the remote and harsh terrain he was travelling. It also provides information regarding observations on the Bamian idols and the description of the trade of the region. His recollections are tied up with a progressively important aspect of British imperialism - the enterprise of gathering and recording knowledge about the land and the peoples it seeks to rule or control.

7. Nawab Sultan Jahan Begam: An Account of My Life

The publication entitled, Akhtar Iqbal (The Star of Prosperity) in Urdu, carries the story down to the end of the twelfth year of the reign of Nawab Sultan Jahan Begam. The author has endeavoured to give a faithful picture of the general conditions of life in the-then Bhopal, and the manner and character of its administration. In fact, the present volume including the other two volumes named Gohur-i-Iqbal (The Pearl of Prosperity) and Taj-ul-Iqbal (The Crown of Prosperity) covers a period of over two hundred years, and they thus form a complete record of the origin and history of the Bhopal State, and the gradual development, from reign to reign, of its resources and administrative organizations. The literal translation of the original text was carried out by Mr. B. Ghoshal, an accomplished Urdu and Persian Scholar and it is translated to English by C. H. Payne.
