It gives me pleasure to present the e-Abhilekh in a new look. The idea of the Newsletter took shape through a humble beginning made by the Department in April 2006 and continued till April 2009. It was then only confined to the activities of the National Archives of India.

The present revised version, however, promises to be more meaningful and purposeful. It has been planned with the objective of disseminating information for development of archives not only in the country but also around the world.

I hope that by sharing experience and information, we will be able to access and adopt the latest techniques in the field of Archives and open new vistas to help one another in carrying forward our efforts in conserving our archival wealth for the posterity.

We look forward to your feedback and suggestions.

Pramod Jain, IAS
Director General of Archives

HISTORY IN THE MAKING

Plans to digitize 25 lakh rarest documents

3.74 lakh documents already done

SUDHEEK GOUTHAM

Hyderabad: Be it the farmans and sanads (authoritative records) of various ruling dynasties of Deccan Sultans, or the Mughal records of Deccan province pertaining to the reign of Shah Jahan and Aurangzeb, besides the administration records of Madras Secretariat, Andhra Secretariat, Ex-Hyderabad Secretariat till the present AP government was formed, all the precious documents are treasured in the AP State Archives and Research Institute. The Archives which plans to digitize about 25 lakh documents has so far completed the job of 3.74 lakhs of them. The State Archives institute, which has recently set a milestone by embarking on the project of digitization, is one of the leading archives of the country. It is the treasure house of extremely precious records in a very large quantity of records in million, more than its parent institute, National Archives of India, New Delhi.

records of various ruling dynasties of Deccan such as Bahmani, Adil Shahis. Apart from this, it also possesses Mughal records dated back to 1406 A.D. as well as those of Asaf Jahi dynasty," said Dr Zareena Parveen, Director of State Archives. Dr Parveen said: The Hans India that the repositories of archives here are the richest in the world. The archives serve as primary source of information to the government as well as the research scholars working on the political, economic, administrative and social, cultural and literary history of Deccan. It also preserves the family and private collection of the above mentioned rulers and distinguished personalities in different languages including Persian, Urdu, Telugu, English, Marathi and Kannada. Earlier, the Andhra Record Office, Kurnool (the capital of AP from 1953-1956) continued as a branch of Central Record office in Hyderabad until April 31, 1957. Later both the office were merged and since then, the records of secretariat department (G.O's) of the Andhra are including board of revenue records, survey records, proceeding, volumes, electoral rolls, confidential records, dating from 1920 onwards up to 1952 were also transferred to the Central Office at Hyderabad. The records that were earlier preserved in an old traditional way by stacking bastas (bags) are now being preserved in movable compactors. "Compactors protect the records from being exposed to dust, which are the main reasons for spoilage of documents," said the Director.

Chief Minister has sanctioned Rs 2 Crore annually for a period of 14 years for the digitization and preservation of the precious old records. The State Archives has accordingly taken up the task of digitization of 50 million records. The first phase of the grand digitalization Project was unveiled on 23 April 2013 and a total number of 3,73,134 documents of ex-Hyderabad Government of the year 1846 and Andhra Pradesh GOs 1920 onwards have been scanned/microfilmed and digitized.

The department has also taken up a project of National Mission for Manuscripts to repair 9,322 manuscript folios under preventive conservation and 1,515 under curative conservation.

Assam

Shri Jishnu Baruah, IAS, Principal Secretary to Chief Minister took additional charge of the State Archives on 19 January, 2013. The company that is synonymous with metal almirahs, refrigerators, typewriters, soaps and locks will offer enthusiasts a chance to gaze at historical artefacts at an exhibition titled Sohrab Godrej: The Restless Visionary. Organized by Godrej Archives, it will feature images and exhibits profiling the landmark events and changes brought about by the former Chairman, Sohrab Godrej.

"In this exhibition, it was decided to bring alive his life as a heritage conservator, environmentalist and a world traveller, who reached out to several influential world leaders to establish a global presence for Godrej," says Vrunda Pathare, Chief Archivist, Godrej Archives.

Incidentally, Sohrab Godrej himself during the company's centenary year celebrations in 1997, mooted the idea of an archive for the company. Some of the interesting exhibits on display include Godrej's physics journal and degree certificate, personal belongings like clothes, shoes, hat, photographs, collectibles such as vintage cameras, stamps, coins, picture postcards, LP records, a picnic basket and his last travel bag with all its contents.

One of the most striking installations is a photo mosaic made of 1,200 smaller photographs of Sohrab Godrej and arranged so that when seen from a distance, it resembles a portrait of him.

The exhibition also features an audio kiosk where visitors can listen to a recording of Sohrab Godrej talking about his uncle Ardeshin and father Pirojsha — the founding fathers of Godrej.

Special Feature

9th June: International Archives Day

In 2004, at the International Congress in Vienna, the 2000 participants adopted a resolution requesting the United Nations to create an International Archives Day.

The UNESCO General Conference at its 33rd session in 2005 at Paris proclaimed the 27th October as the World Day for Audio-visual Heritage. The World Day is an appropriate opportunity to raise public awareness of the importance of audio-visual archives. It brings new incentives to the benefit of the preservation of these archives. This was an excellent initiative, but these are not the only archives that are at risk and in need of attention.

This is the reason ICA decided at its Annual General Meeting in November 2007 to launch the International Archives Day by its own, on the 9th of June because on the 9th of June 1948, the International Council on Archives was created under the auspices of the UNESCO. This choice was adopted by ICA Executive Board, and adopted by the archives community as a whole.

Through the International Archives Day, we can:

- Raise awareness among the public about the importance of records and archives, in order to make it understood that records and archives provide the foundation for their rights and identity;
- Raise the awareness of decision makers about the benefits of records management;
- Raise the public, private and public sectors' awareness about the necessity of preserving archives for the long-term, and of providing access to them;
- Promote and bring to the attention of the larger public unique, extraordinary and rare documents preserved in archival institutions;
- Improve the image of records and archives and enhance their visibility globally.

Archives around the World

Australia

The National Archives of Australia holds a large collection of 20th Century migration records including records of child migrants. Many schemes that operated between Britain and Australia were run by non-government organisations. Even though many of these records are not held by the Archives there are records that reveal how these organisations operated and how successful they were. To learn some amazing history about child migration to Australia a free public seminar was organised on 15 and 19 June 2013 at National Archives of Australia, 16 Corporate Drive, CANNONHILL, QLD 4170

Bangladesh

Friends of Archives celebrated the International Archives Day on 9 June 2013. They organized a seminar on the importance of Archives Day and Right to Information for the young college and university students. On this occasion, they published articles in the daily newspapers and also persuaded the daily newspapers to arrange a roundtable on the importance of Record Management in Bangladesh: Problems and Prospects.

Japan

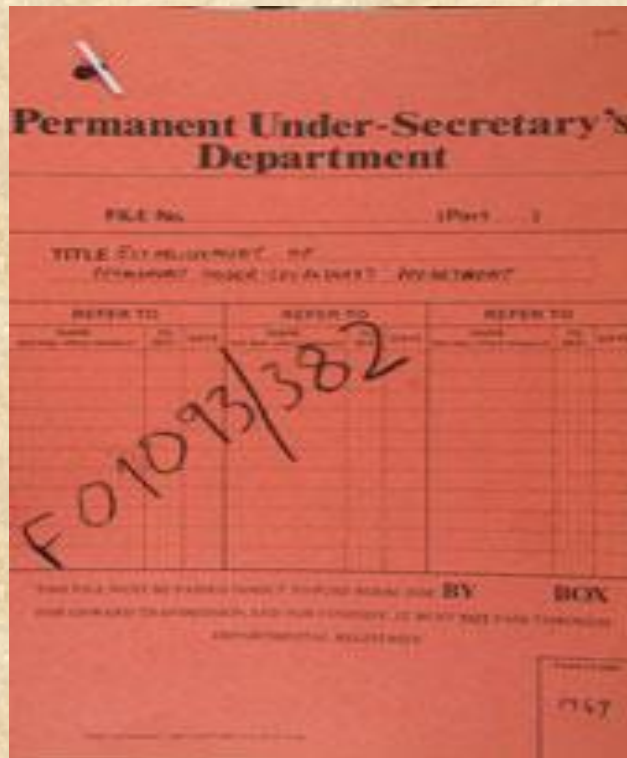

Mr. Takeo Katoh, took over as President, National Archives of Japan on 3 June 2013.

United Kingdom

Hundreds of previously secret files concerning the role of British intelligence in the World War II and the early cold war period were released. In 2005, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office (FCO) released the first tranche of records from the Permanent Under-Secretary Department (PUSD), the department responsible for liaising with the UK's intelligence agencies. Further 463 pieces have now been released in to the FO 1093 series, covering the period 1939-1951, as well as 17 pieces from 1903-1913.

In addition, a collection of more than hundred files from the Cabinet Secretary's miscellaneous papers have been released for the first time into a new series, CAB. The papers, which cover 1936-1951, deals with the organisation and funding of British intelligence. A selection of newly released files can be viewed online.

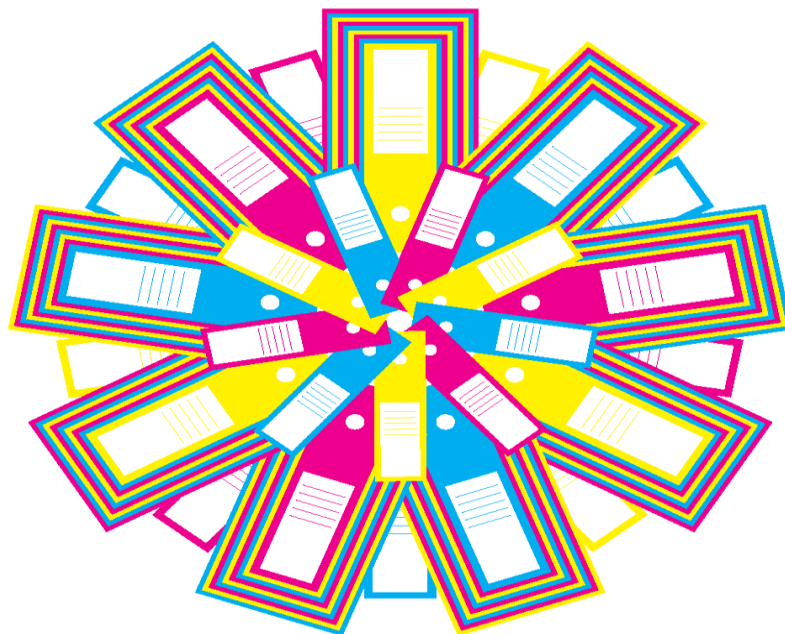

United States of America

Founders Online, a website was created through a cooperative agreement between the National Historical Publications and Records Commission (NHPRC), and The University of Virginia (UVA) Press. This website promises to be of immense value for the public's ability to understand the world and intentions of the nation's founders. It also provides a bold economic, educational, and technical model that will provide important lessons to we plan future efforts for online publication of historical material. Altogether, some 1, 75,000 documents are projected to be on the Founders Online site.

To commemorate 6th International Archives Day, the International Council on Archives has produced a poster in French, English and Spanish.
